

AWR-307-V: Identifying Community Preparedness Resources for Tribal Nations

Tribal Nations Readiness and Resilience Training

Course Description (Course Coming Soon)

This four-hour, virtual, instructor-led course will provide participants with basic information on community preparedness within the unique context of Tribal Nations, highlighting the diverse approaches to resilience across different communities. The course will provide an overview of federal resources available to Tribal Nations, including tools, programs, and additional support mechanisms designed to enhance emergency preparedness and response. The course also addresses the critical aspects of accessing these federal resources, detailing eligibility requirements and common obstacles faced by Tribal Nations. Building on this foundation, participants will learn best practices for effectively integrating federal resources into their emergency preparedness plans, collaborating with federal partners, and applying insights from relevant case studies. By examining these key areas, the course aims to equip Tribal leaders and emergency managers with the knowledge and skills needed to bolster their communities' resilience and readiness for various emergencies.

Course Learning Goals

By the end of this training, learners will be able to:

- Describe the role of community preparedness in Tribal Nations.
- Identify various federal resources available for Tribal Nations.
- Identify success stories from implementing community preparedness initiatives in Tribal Nations.
